

19th century Slavery

In the 19th century 9,566,100 blacks were transported from Africa to America. They had worked as slaves, in awful conditions.

On the 18th of December 1865, slavery was abolished. But, even after the abolishment, a lot of persons had still worked under slavery conditions.

Slavery Is Still Alive

Let's Fight It

Fight for the freedom of modern slaves

Modern

Slavery, this is the name given to the equivalent of slavery back in the 1800's. This terrible practice makes people suffer by taking them away from their families and homes and by tricking them into thinking that great opportunities await them on foreign countries but the fact is that they're really being kidnapped and trafficked!

They're made into slaves of all kinds: sex slaves, domestic workers, forced labor...

And they have no way of getting out of their situation, so it's up to us to help them!

How to help

- Donate to independent groups that help victims financially
- Help by reporting cases of trafficking if you know someone who's guilty of it
- Encourage your local schools to partner with students and include modern slavery in their curricula

In the USA

There's up to 57000 slaves who continue to suffer every day

Slavery has existed for more than one year. Even if it has become less common, modern slavery is a reality and it is mainly found in four ways:

- Debt pay: in order to pay a debt people are enslaved.
- Forced labor: slaves must work under terrible conditions
- Sexual slavery: usually, woman are prostituted and must give what they earn
- Traditional slavery: the oldest kind of slavery in which kids are born as slaves.

Asia is the major concentration of slaves in the world, in fact India and China together, have around 20 million slaves. However in the past, Africa has had over 50 million slaves.
